• DOWN BUT NOT OUT: A murderous and far-ranging crackdown by SPDC forces against the largest nationwide protests since 1988 has dispersed, but not completely shut down resistance. Scores may have been killed by soldiers using machine guns and batons, and at least a thousand people detained. Monasteries have been raided and continue to be locked down.

• Amid splits in the military between officers who refused to kill monks, and hardliners desperate to regain control of the situation, the people still find ways to resist. Clusters of spontaneous protests continue to play “cat-and-mouse” with security forces.

• The violent crackdown has sparked the strongest statements on Burma yet from the international community, with ASEAN expressing “revulsion”, and ASEAN MPs calling for Burma to be expelled. In unprecedented numbers, thousands of supporters all over the world have rallied in solidarity with the democracy movement. China has become a target of anger for its direct support of the junta.

• Burma’s “saffron revolution”, named after monks’ robes, saw tens of thousands of Buddhist monks lead massive anti-junta demonstrations across most of Burma’s States and Divisions.

• On 22 September, hundreds of monks walked past a roadblock to pay respects to Daw Aung San Suu Kyi at her home, a strong assertion of unity between the monks and the pro-democracy movement.

• The dramatic developments have revived calls for the UN Security Council to increase pressure on the military regime. UN Special Advisor Ibrahim Gambari was dispatched to Burma. At press time he was only allowed to meet with SPDC officials and Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, but still had not been able to meet SPDC’s leaders Senior General Than Shwe and General Maung Aye. If Gambari returns to New York empty-handed, the UNSC must be prepared to engage in concrete measures against the regime.

KEY STORY

The “saffron revolution”

Between 18 and 28 September, tens of thousands of monks led massive anti-junta demonstrations across most of Burma’s States and Divisions. In the largest show of peaceful protests against the military regime since 1988, thousands of Burmese civilians from all walks of life joined the rallies.
dramatic event, on 22 September a crowd of 2,000 monks and civilians walked past a roadblock and rallied outside the lakeside house where Daw Aung San Suu Kyi remains detained. The rally served as a strong assertion of unity between the monks and the pro-democracy movement.

The monks’ involvement added momentum and brought greater legitimacy and support to the ongoing demonstrations triggered by the junta’s decision to increase fuel prices on 15 August. [See August 2007 Burma Bulletin and the briefer Fuel price hikes inflame Burmese people]

The new wave of nationwide protests was triggered by the junta’s failure to meet the demands of the All Burma Monks Alliance by the deadline of 17 September. The All Burma Monks Alliance demanded that the SPDC released all detained demonstrators and political prisoners, including Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, and immediately entered into dialogue with democratic forces. In addition to the economic hardship exacerbated by the 15 August fuel price hike, monks were enraged by the regime’s violent crackdown on their peaceful protests. Bloggers beat censorship

Defying the regime’s media censorship and its threats of arrest, Burmese activists posted pictures and videos of anti-junta demonstrations on websites and blogs. Many of these images were picked up by mainstream news outlets, ensuring that news, photos, and footage of the protests were widely circulated domestically and internationally. Below are some examples of how the regime restricted freedom of information in Burma during the demonstrations:

- The state-run press avoided reporting on the nationwide anti-junta demonstrations, filling its state-run newspapers with reports of natural disasters and SPDC officials inspecting infrastructure projects.
- The SPDC ordered Rangoon-based journals and periodicals to denounce the demonstrations led by Buddhist monks and to print articles accusing pro-democracy activists of orchestrating the protests. However, several privately-owned publications decided to close rather than printing pro-regime propaganda.

From the start of the protests, the SPDC denied visas to enter Burma to all foreign journalists. On 11 September, SPDC authorities cut off the mobile phones of several journalists working for foreign media, including one journalist and one photographer from AFP. On 27 September, SPDC Army soldiers and police searched for foreign journalists in Rangoon hotels where internet and international phone lines were still open. Kenji Nagai, a 50-year-old Japanese photojournalist, was killed by a shot fired at close range by an SPDC Army soldier in streets of Rangoon. On 28 September, SPDC authorities arrested Min Zaw, the Burmese correspondent of a Japanese daily. SPDC authorities blocked numerous websites and blogs in an attempt to block the flow of information. On 3 September, SPDC authorities blocked access to YouTube, which featured videos of the ongoing anti-junta demonstrations in Burma. On 26 September, SPDC authorities closed Internet cafés in Rangoon. On 28 September, the regime shut off the country’s two internet service providers. On 7 September, SPDC authorities in Pakokku, Magwe Division, arrested four local residents for allegedly providing foreign media with information on the anti-junta protest staged by monks on 5 September. On 23 September, SPDC authorities arrested a school teacher who was taking photographs of the monks’ demonstration in Myitkyina, Kachin State. On 10 September, SPDC authorities disconnected the telephones of about 50 pro-democracy activists to prevent them from talking to Burmese and foreign journalists. On 12 September, the junta cut the last telephone line at the NLD headquarters in Rangoon. On 26 September, SPDC authorities disconnected most of the country’s mobile phone lines.

The crackdown

As the monks-led demonstrations grew larger, the regime stepped up security in Burma’s main cities and prepared to quash the protests.

- The SPDC ordered a state of emergency authorizing regional and local authorities to control demonstrations, including an order to open fire on protesters if necessary.
- SPDC Army troops from five battalions stationed in rural areas were redeployed in Akyab, Arakan State, a site of continued anti-junta protests led by the monks.
- The regime stepped up security around monasteries, threatened monks, and severely restricted their freedom of movement.

• SPDC Army soldiers and police were ordered to stockpile weapons, loudspeakers, barbed wire, bulletproof jackets, and other equipment.96
• Hospitals in Rangoon were instructed to clear wards in preparation for an influx of patients.97
• On 25 September, the SPDC imposed a curfew from 9 pm to 5 am in Rangoon and banned any gathering of more than five people.98 It also declared the city and its environs a “restricted area”, a term normally reserved for military or conflict zones. Similar restrictions, to be in effect for 60 days, were imposed in Mandalay.99

On 26 September the SPDC began a massive crackdown against demonstrators.

Troops of the SPDC Army’s Division No. 22 were redeployed to Rangoon from conflict areas in Eastern Burma. Division No. 22 played an active role in the 1988 repression of the pro-democracy demonstrations.100 Soldiers from the Light Infantry Division 77 were also redeployed in Rangoon from their base in Pegu Division.101

SPDC Army troops and riot police clubbed and tear-gassed protesters, fired shots on protesting monks and demonstrators, and arrested hundreds of the monks who were at the heart of the demonstrations.102 Shops and government offices were shut down, and all civil servants were sent home. Schools were also ordered to close.103 The crackdown continued for two more days as troops fired rifles and used tear gas to disperse demonstrators.104 Soldiers and police chased and beat protesters and carted others away in trucks.105

Between 26 and 27 September, the SPDC arrested over 600 monks throughout Burma as part of crackdown against the Buddhist clergy leading the protesters.106 Monks were forcibly disrobed, severely beaten, kicked, and taken away by the SPDC security forces.107 During a raid in monasteries in Myitkyina, Kachin State, SPDC security forces reportedly beat four monks to death.108 In a further move to quash anti-junta demonstrations led by monks, SPDC authorities declared no-go zones around five key Buddhist monasteries in Rangoon.109

As the SPDC crackdown was underway in Burma, anti-junta demonstrations were held outside Burmese embassies in Malaysia, Philippines, Indonesia, Thailand, Cambodia, Japan, UK, and Australia.110

Death toll

Official figures of victims of the SPDC’s brutal crackdown could not be verified.

INSIDE BURMA

Emergency aid supply blocked: humanitarian concern

On 28 September, the UN’s World Food Program (WFP) warned that new SPDC restrictions on the movement of food caused by crackdowns on protesters will interfere with the delivery of food to half a million starving people. SPDC authorities stalled all movement of food out of Mandalay Division, ending delivery of WFP operations in Northern Shan State and the central “dry zone”. Increased restriction on movement in Akyab halted food deliveries to starving villagers in Northern Arakan State.¹⁴⁵ A UNICEF official warned that the current situation will only lead to further restrictions on UNICEF’s ability to reach the country’s most vulnerable children.¹⁴⁶

The SPDC Army continues to be weakened by desertions. In September, it was reported that 69 soldiers from the regional military control headquarters in Akyab, Arakan State had deserted in August. In a desperate attempt to offset the increasing number of desertions, the regime targeted students for recruitment in Kachin:

- Various SPDC Army Infantry Battalions demanded 360 students from various schools throughout Kachin State.
- On 3 September, three students from a local high school were forcibly recruited in Machangbaw Township, Kachin State, and sent for military training in Naypyidaw.
- During a festival in Palate Township, Mandalay Division, SPDC soldiers from LIB 14 ab ducted children for military service. Ten- to fifteen-year-olds were fed with alcohol, before being taken to barracks on the back of motorcycles.

Burma’s ethnic groups support peaceful protests

Many of Burma’s ethnic political leaders and several of Burma’s armed resistance groups voiced support for the Buddhist monks’ peaceful protests against the military junta.

- Col Yawdserk, Shan State Army - South (SSA-S) Commander, voiced his support for the monks and said that the demonstrations were the culmination of the regime’s misrule.
- On 24 September a New Mon State Party (NMSP) official said that the party supported the protesting monks.
- Cin Shing Htan, Chairman of the Zomi National Congress, said that the protesters speak for all the people of Burma.
- Arakan League for Democracy (ALD) Secretary, Aye Thar Aung, said that the party was ready to cooperate with the monks.
- Ethnic leaders that joined the demonstrations included representatives from the Arakan League for Democracy, the United National League for Democracy, and the Mon National Party.

DISPLACEMENT

Refugees expected in Thailand

On 26 September, Burmese activists in Thailand urged the Thai government and the international community to prepare for the possible influx of refugees. The closure of 19 border crossings between Thailand and Burma’s Karen State as a result of an agreement between Thai and SPDC officials will create significant difficulties for asylum seekers attempting to flee violence and crackdowns in Burma.

Migrant workers in Thailand

Migrant workers in Thailand reported that it is becoming more difficult to find work without identity cards or worker registration permits. Some brokers are selling ID cards for 500 baht.¹⁵⁸

- Early September: 600 migrant workers were arrested in Samut Sakhorn. Most were not deported, but had to pay between 2,000 to 3,000 baht to local police for their release.¹⁵⁹
- 6 September: Four people from Arakan State were transferred to Ranong police station for deportation. They had paid 3,000 baht to a tout to find them work and safe passage, but instead were sold as slaves to a fishing enterprise for 7,000 kyat each.¹⁶⁰
- 12 September: Thai authorities relocated 47 Padaung to Huay Pu Keng. The move is one of many as part of a larger plan to bring all “long-neck” people to the one area for exploitation for tourism.¹⁶¹

Forced relocation of Rohingya continues

In September, the SPDC continued to relocate Rohingya villages in Arakan State to make room for model villages, building projects, and roads.

- 7 September: Na Sa Ka officials began confiscating arable land from farmers in Na Sa Ka area No 3, for distribution to model villagers. Na Sa Ka have also been collecting Rohingya family lists, for relocation to Coco Island.¹⁶²
- 13 September: SPDC authorities in Kyaukpyu Town ordered more than 60 people to relocate to three sheds one mile out of town, to make way for an expansion of the stadium.¹⁶³
- 24-26 September: Kawarbil and Zin Paing Nyar villagers were relocated to Buthidaung Township because their lands are needed for local Na Sa Ka.¹⁶⁴

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

The SPDC’s violent and brutal assault on Buddhist monks and peaceful civilian demonstrators drew widespread condemnation from the international community. Besides the junta’s usual detractors, the US, EU, and other western powers, ASEAN members were harshly critical of the SPDC as well. China even called for national reconciliation in Burma.

UN: Gambari snubbed – UNSC ready to act

The current unrest prompted the UN Security Council to convene an emergency session on the deteriorating political conditions in Burma.¹⁶⁵ During a closed-door meeting, the UN Special Advisor on Burma, Ibrahim Gambari, updated the Security Council on the latest developments.¹⁶⁶ After the meeting, the Council expressed its support for the UN Secretary General Ban Ki-moon’s decision to dispatch Gambari to the region to explore a peaceful resolution to the crisis.¹⁶⁷

However, in a development that can be interpreted as a snub or a possible power struggle within the SPDC, Sr Gen Than Shwe and SPDC number 2 Sr Gen Maung Aye failed to attend the 29 September meeting with Gambari. The next day, Gambari, met with acting SPDC Prime Minister Thein Sein, Culture Minister Khin Aung Nyint, and Information Minister Kyaw Hsan.¹⁶⁸ Gambari then flew to Rangoon where he met with Daw Aung San Suu Kyi for over an hour at an SPDC guest house.¹⁶⁹

China calls for democratic reform

Faced with the international community’s condemnation of the violent crackdown, even China could not defend the SPDC. On 26 September, China’s Ambassador to the UN, Wang Guangya, said that China wished to see stability, mutual reconciliation, and progress towards democracy in Burma.170 Premier Wen Jiabao confirmed China’s shift, and expressed hopes that stability, national reconciliation, and democracy will be achieved as soon as possible through peaceful means.171

ASEAN expresses “revulsion”

- On 24 September, the ASEAN Inter-Parliamentary Myanmar Caucus (AIPMC) called for the UN Security Council to pass a resolution on Burma and take steps to intervene in the crisis.172 On 28 September, the group called for the expulsion of Burma from ASEAN.173
- On 26 September, the Philippines Senate adopted a resolution urging the UN Security Council, the EU and ASEAN to end Burma’s military junta’s repression on its people.174 On 28 September, Philippines President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo called on the SPDC to act in its own best interests by restoring democracy without further delay.175
- On 27 September, ASEAN Foreign Ministers expressed their revulsion to SPDC FM, Nyan Win, over reports that demonstrations in Burma were being suppressed by violence.176

EU, US, Australia: more sanctions

- On 25 September, US President Bush announced that the US will tighten economic sanctions against the SPDC’s senior leaders. New sanctions will block the property holdings of SPDC leaders and individuals who provide financial backing for the regime. The US will also impose an expanded visa ban on individuals responsible for human rights violations in Burma, as well as their family members.177
- On 27 September, EU diplomats agreed to consider imposing more economic sanctions on Burma’s military leaders.178 French President Nicolas Sarkozy urged French businesses, including oil company Total, to freeze investments in the country and called for the swift adoption of UN sanctions.179
- On 27 September, Australian PM John Howard said that Australia would tighten existing visa restrictions on regime officials and was also examining the adoption of some targeted financial sanctions on regime officials.180

Prices

The price of basic commodities continued to rise because of the increased fuel prices and uncertainty over the political situation. In Arakan State, food prices doubled. Domestic airfares for Burmese citizens rose 30%, and tickets for some flights to Naypyidaw doubled. Amid anxiety about political instability, there was a rush of depositors withdrawing their savings from banks in Mandalay in the first half of September. Yoma and Kanbawza banks were especially affected. People also sought financial security by buying gold. The price of gold rose from 490,000 to 503,000 kyat per tical.

Food shortages

The increased cost of basic commodities has caused massive hardship for ordinary people. Faced with rising domestic rice prices, people in Western Arakan State have to smuggle rice from Bangladesh in order to stave off hunger. “Now [my three children] are getting used to eating just a meal a day,” said construction worker Myint Myint.

Dam project suspended

On 2 September, unknown assailants killed a Thai technician while he surveyed a dam site. On 4 September, the Electricity Generating Authority of Thailand (EGAT) suspended the project and evacuated the site of its 47 staff. Thai Energy Minister Piyasavasti Amaranand urged energy authorities to expedite power plant development in Laos if the plan in Burma was uncertain.

SPDC keeps selling off Burma’s resources

While the political and economic crises mounted, the SPDC continued negotiations for the sale of the country’s natural resources.

- 4 September: India Union Minister of State for Heavy Industries, Santosh Mohan Dev, said that gas from Burma will be transported to Cachar, Assam, through Mizoram.
- 14 September: SPDC energy ministry sources reported that Thailand and the SPDC were negotiating for the construction of a gas pipeline to Thailand from Mottama M-9. The development project is expected to require US$1 billion investment.

• 24 September: India’s Oil and Natural Gas Corp (ONGC) signed an agreement with the SPDC for exploration in AD-2, AD-3, and AD-9 offshore Arakan blocks.

Amid talk of new sanctions, South Korea’s Daewoo, France’s Total, India’s ONGC, and Thailand’s PTTEP came under increasing pressure to end their energy investment projects in Burma.
