• SPDC announces constitutional referendum for May. Despite calls for a free and fair process, the SPDC imposes rules that ban campaigning against the referendum, bar monks and nuns from voting, and do not allow for an independent monitoring of the process.

• Taking for granted the outcome of the referendum, the SPDC also announces general elections for 2010. The junta declares that Daw Aung San Suu Kyi will be barred from contesting the polls. The USDA mobilizes to search for candidates.

• The SPDC announcements draw harsh criticism from pro-democracy groups and ethnic organizations. The NLD warns against increased instability should the proposed constitution be adopted.

• The international community reacts with skepticism to the regime's plan. Indonesia urges the SPDC to revise the constitution before the referendum and demands that Daw Aung San Suu Kyi be included in the process.

• Exiled groups announce a draft alternative constitution that has been endorsed by 90 organizations.

• Burma’s record on press freedom is still one of the world’s worst, say two independent reports. In February, the regime arrests two more journalists.

• The US strengthens financial sanctions on the junta’s business cronies. Meanwhile, local activists launch a consumer boycott in Burma.

• The SPDC increases rice exports to Bangladesh while domestic shortages continue. Rice prices are up by 10% in the first two weeks of February.

SPDC announces referendum and general elections

On 9 February, the SPDC announced it will hold a constitutional referendum in May followed by “multi-party democratic elections” in 2010.¹

On 19 February, the SPDC announced that the drafting of the constitution had been completed.² State media said the junta-appointed Constitution Drafting Commission finished the document after more than two months of work. However, the text of the constitution has not been disclosed. Head of the Drafting Commission Aung Toe indicated that few changes had been made from the guidelines already made public. SPDC Foreign Minister Nyan Win revealed that that the new constitution would bar Daw Aung San Suu Kyi from the elections because of her marriage to foreign national Michael Aris, who died in 1999, and because their children hold foreign passports.

The junta-backed Union Solidarity and Development Association (USDA) is widely expected to be in charge of the organization of the constitutional referendum and the 2010 general election. Reports have already surfaced that the USDA is mobilizing to identify individuals loyal to the military regime to be selected as candidates in the election. According to the pro-junta National Unity Party (NUP) Secretary General Khin Maung Gyi, the USDA would also become a political party to contest the polls.

On 26 February, the SPDC announced the rules for the referendum on the proposed constitution. According to the rules, Monks and nuns are barred from voting. Anyone who distributes leaflets or makes speeches against the referendum can be imprisoned for three years. There was no mention of independent observers being allowed to monitor the voting process. The referendum will be announced at least 21 days before the balloting. Based on an initial reading of the rules, it would appear that the adoption of the constitution only requires the reporting of the percentage of votes in favor in relation to the total number of eligible voters.

The SPDC also appointed a 45-member Referendum Convening Commission to oversee the referendum. Most of the commission members are junta-handpicked individuals who served as delegates at the National Convention and in the Constitution Drafting Committee.

Pro-democracy and ethnic groups reject SPDC’s plan

• The National League for Democracy (NLD) called the SPDC’s announcement of referendum and elections “vague, incomplete and strange.” NLD spokesman Nyan Win expressed surprise that the election had been planned before the results of the constitutional referendum were known. The NLD warned that the SPDC’s unilateral announcement of a constitutional referendum and general elections could create more instability and would not lead to meaningful political dialogue and national reconciliation. The NLD also termed the SPDC’s remarks that Daw Aung San Suu Kyi would not be allowed to stand in elections in 2010 as “unlawful” and a “personal, political attack” because the constitution and elections laws had not been adopted.

• The 88 Generation Students described the SPDC’s plans as a “declaration of war by the military regime against the people of Burma.” The group said the junta was attempting to legalize the military dictatorship with a “sham constitution” and urged people to vote against the charter. The group reiterated that an unrepresentative constitution could only lead to national unrest and called for tripartite dialogue as the only way to bring about national reconciliation and democratic transition.

International community critical of junta's announcements

• Indonesian FM Hassan Wirajuda said that the SPDC’s constitution should be revised before being put to a national referendum to ensure that the interests of opposition and ethnic groups were protected.23 Wirajuda also said that Indonesia wants to see Daw Aung San Suu Kyi included in the political process in Burma.24
• UN Sec-Gen Ban Ki-moon urged the SPDC to ensure that the constitution represents all people in the country and to hold substantive talks with Daw Aung San Suu Kyi on the referendum.25
• The US said that the SPDC's plan for a constitutional referendum in May and general elections in 2010 was flawed.26 Washington also criticized the SPDC’s announcement to ban Daw Aung San Suu Kyi from running in elections in 2010.27
• Australian FM Stephen Smith said: “We're not persuaded that this is anything more than a cynical sham.”28
• The EU said that the SPDC should free Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and all other political prisoners to show that it is serious about the transition to civilian rule.29
• Singapore FM George Yeo said that the SPDC’s announcement to bar Daw Aung San Suu Kyi from participating in elections is odd and out of date.30

INSIDE BURMA

NLD harassment

• 1 February: SPDC Special Branch Police in Rangoon’s North Dagon Myothit Township took two NLD youth members into custody.31
• 12 February: SPDC police, security forces, and pagoda officials at the Phaungtaw Oo pagoda in Taunggoat, Arakan State, blocked a group of local NLD members from holding a candlelight vigil... and offering food to the monks to mark Union Day.\textsuperscript{32} NLD member Chit Htwe was arrested as he tried to get past security at the pagoda. In Sagaing Division, the regime refused to allow the NLD to hold Union Day celebrations.\textsuperscript{33} Restrictions were also imposed on NLD members in Mandalay Division.\textsuperscript{34}

- 13 February: SPDC extended the house arrest of NLD Vice Chairman Tin Oo for another year.\textsuperscript{35}

Pro-democracy activities

- 5 February: The NLD invited ethnic ceasefire groups to meet at its Rangoon headquarters for talks on resolving their differences.\textsuperscript{36} The call remained unanswered, as the ceasefire groups, while pleased by the NLD invitation, appeared wary of showing public support for such talks.\textsuperscript{37}
- 5 February: The Rangoon Division of the People’s Movement called on the SPDC to kick-start tripartite dialogue. The group said it fully supported the NLD’s Independence Day demand to make 2008 the year of national reconciliation.\textsuperscript{38}
- 12 February: About 600 people, including NLD members, ethnic leaders, 88 Generation Students, and veteran politicians, celebrated the 61st anniversary of Burma’s Union Day at the NLD headquarters in Rangoon. In a statement issued during the ceremony, the NLD called for tripartite dialogue, the release of all political prisoners, and national reconciliation.\textsuperscript{39} In the evening, pro-democracy forces held a Union Day banquet in Rangoon. About 50 representatives of pro-democracy organizations and ceasefire groups attended the event.\textsuperscript{40}
- 13 February: NLD members and student youth across Burma celebrated the 93\textsuperscript{rd} birthday of independence hero General Aung San. About 150 people attended a celebration at the house of NLD member Lay Lwin in Rangoon’s South Dagon Township. Small groups of people also gathered at pagodas around Rangoon for candlelight vigils.\textsuperscript{41}

Anti-junta protests

- First week of February: Activists in Rangoon began a leaflet campaign urging Burmese people to boycott businesses belonging to cronies and supporters of the regime. The boycott included Myanmar Beer, Dagon Beer, London Cigarettes and Vegas Cigarettes, the state-owned Aung Bar Lay Lottery and J’ Donuts coffee shops which are believed to be owned by Than Shwe’s son. Junta crony Tay Za’s Htoo Trading Company Limited was also on the boycott list as well as State-run newspapers New Light of Myanmar, Mirror, and two privately run journals, Nan Myint and Snapshot.\textsuperscript{42}
- 12 February: More than 30 protesters dressed in blue prison uniforms staged a protest outside the NLD headquarters in Rangoon. The protesters demanded the release of political prisoners and respect for UN resolutions on Burma.\textsuperscript{43}
- 12 February: University students with the All Kachin Students and Youth Union (AKSYU) distributed leaflets and pasted posters on walls in Myitkyina and Mogauk, Kachin State. The handouts and posters called for tripartite dialogue and the release of all political prisoners, and criticized the SPDC’s constitutional referendum.\textsuperscript{44}
13 February: About 50 students marched in the streets of Akyab, Arakan State, to protest the SPDC authorities’ doubling of school bus fares. The Generation Wave and Freedom Fighters groups distributed anti-junta leaflets in Rangoon’s Kamaryut Township.

Call for Olympics boycott

On 25 February, the 88 Generation Students called for an international boycott of this year’s Beijing Olympic Games. The group accused China of arming the SPDC and failing to facilitate meaningful dialogue with the pro-democracy forces.

Pro-democracy exile groups complete draft constitution

On 15 February, Burmese opposition groups in exile announced the completion of a draft federal constitution. The draft constitution is endorsed by over 90 pro-democracy and ethnic organizations. The Secretary of the Federal Constitution Drafting and Coordinating Committee (FCDCC) said the draft constitution outlines a genuine federal system that excludes the right to secession. The committee now intends to put its draft before the people of Burma for discussion and feedback.

KNU top leader assassinated

On 14 February, two unidentified assailants shot and killed Karen National Union (KNU) General Secretary Mahn Sha Lah Phan at his home in Mae Sot, Thailand. The KNU’s second in command, Htoo Htoo Lay, 61, became the group’s new leader. Speculation has run rampant about who was behind the assassination. Mahn Sha Lah Phan’s son, Hse Hse, blamed the pro-junta Democratic Karen Buddhist Army (DKBA). Sources close to the DKBA said that the killing was most likely carried out by Soe Myint and several other members of DKBA Battalion 999. The DKBA is frequently involved in joint operations with SPDC Army units in attacking KNU bases.

Bombs

- 9 February: A bomb blast in a garbage container at the main gate of Sitkhine Pawndawgyi Bridge in Akyab, Arakan State, damaged three military combat vans. No one was killed or wounded. The bomb blast was believed to be the work of inter-city bus drivers who were fed up with continued SPDC extortion and insufficient fuel supply.
- 18 February: Four small bombs exploded in Tachilek, Eastern Shan State. The first bomb went off near the Paradise Hotel and damaged the hotel’s staff quarters. Three other bombs exploded immediately afterwards near a teashop. No one claimed responsibility for the bomb blasts.

HUMAN RIGHTS

Monks still targeted

SPDC surveillance and harassment of monasteries and monks continued. Amid rumors of further protests, immigration department officials have been checking monk lists in every monastery in

Residents in Pakokku, Magwe Division, reported a heavy presence of military intelligence, police, and USDA members monitoring local monasteries. SPDC authorities are reportedly monitoring monastery visitors and recording phone calls to and from the monasteries.

Despite the SPDC intimidation, monks continued to refuse alms from SPDC military members and their supporters. The SPDC also appears to be threatened by Dhamma talks. On 16 February, SPDC authorities in Pwint Phyu Township, Magwe Division, cancelled a Dhamma talk by abbot Thu Mingala and ordered him to leave town. The local police chief punched and arrested a young man when he demanded an explanation for the cancellation. He was released the next day after paying 100,000 kyat.

Detention conditions

On 5 February, UN Special Rapporteur on human rights in Burma Paulo Sergio Pinheiro expressed dismay that peaceful demonstrators and activists continued to be arrested, detained, and sentenced to prison terms under security laws. Pinheiro said that the prosecutions were a “flagrant abuse of people's right to a free and fair trial.” Pinheiro also called on the SPDC to provide adequate medical care to demonstrators and activists imprisoned since last year’s crackdown.

In February, new reports emerged of poor detention conditions:

- Ohn Than, a demonstrator detained in Rangoon’s Insein prison, was placed in solitary confinement and denied family visits after writing a letter about poor living conditions inside the prison. Ohn Than suffers from hypertension and kidney stones.
- 88 Generation Students group member Mie Mie’s health is deteriorating due to the Insein prison authorities’ refusal to provide adequate medical care. Mie Mie is suffering from a heart problem.
- In the night between 21 and 22 February, Zawmir Uddin, a 26-year-old Rohingya from Akyab, Arakan State, died in police custody after local policemen severely beaten him.

Freedom of information

In February, two independent organizations reported on the deteriorating situation of freedom of information in Burma:

On 4 February, the Committee to Protect Journalists (CPJ) annual report “Attacks on the Press in 2007” said:

- Burma is the sixth leading jailer of journalists in the world.
- In 2007, there was a “significant deterioration” in the working conditions of journalists in Burma. The pervading atmosphere of censorship, threats, and arrests contribute to Burma being “one of the world's most repressive media environments.”
- During the September protests, the regime subjected journalists to increased forms of repression and intimidation, including the cutting of phone lines, blocking internet access, the closing of independent news outlets, and the arbitrary confiscation of photographic and recording equipment.

On 13 February, Reporters Sans Frontières (RSF) “2008 Annual Report” said:

- Working conditions for journalists in Burma significantly deteriorated from mid-August 2007.
• Fifteen journalists were arrested as a result of covering the protests, while Japanese journalist Kenji Nagai was killed and other foreign correspondents closely monitored. Nine journalists remained in detention as of 1 January 2008.
• The regime blocked internet access and restricted the sale of foreign periodicals in the days and months following the protests.
• Several journalists suspected of sympathy with the protest movement were banned from writing articles.

The junta’s ongoing restrictions to freedom of information reinforced the findings of CPJ and RSF:

• Early February: The SPDC Censorship Board banned the publication of any announcement made by the charity Free Funeral Service Society’s in the weekly Ray of Light journal.66
• Early February: The SPDC Press Scrutiny Board’s Director Maj Tin Swe summoned and warned the editors of 15 periodicals and journals not to post uncensored articles and news on their websites.67
• 3 February: Police in Rangoon charged NLD member and blogger Nay Phone Latt. If convicted, Nay Phone Latt faces up to seven years of imprisonment.68
• 15 February: SPDC military intelligence officers raided the office of the Myanmar Nation weekly in Rangoon and arrested the paper’s chief editor Thet Zin and office manager Sein Win Maung. Officials seized a copy of Pinheiro’s report on Burma, a Shan ethnic leader’s book on federalism, and a VCD on the September uprising.69 On 18 February, the junta’s Censorship Board ordered that the publication of the Myanmar Nation be suspended and its offices be closed temporarily.70

Rohingya targeted

Rohingya continued to be arbitrarily harassed, arrested, and detained on fabricated charges to extort money. Na Sa Ka Area No 5 in Maungdaw Township is particularly notorious, where more than 80 Rohingyas have been taken to a temporary detention center since the start of 2008.71

• 2 February: Na Sa Ka Area 5 officials arrested two men from Kkuppagoung village, on charges of illegally crossing the border and human trafficking. Nasaka ordered them to pay six million kyat for their release.72
• 4 February: Na Sa Ka Area 5 officials arrested two men from Auk Pyoma village on charges of using Bangladeshi mobile phones. They were released the next day after their relatives paid four million kyat.73
• 7 February: Maungdaw police arrested a woman from Myoma Ka Nyin Tan village on charges of having a mobile phone. Na Sa Ka officials ordered her to pay 600,000 kyat for her release.74
• 8 February: Na Sa Ka Area 5 officials arrested a man from Mayazin Para village, Bawli Bazaar, on charges of having a mobile phone and told him to pay two million kyat for his release. He was unable to pay and is still in detention.75
• 10 February: Na Sa Ka Area 3 officials arrested a local businessman for building his house without permission. He was released a week later after paying 2.5 million kyat.76
• 12 February: Bawli Bazaar police arrested a man on charges of traveling to Bangladesh and ordered him to pay 50,000 kyat for his release.77

Forced labor continues despite MoU

On 26 February, Executive Director of the International Labor Organization (ILO) Kari Tapiola said that the ILO had successfully concluded negotiations with the SPDC to extend a MoU dealing with forced labor complaints for another year. Despite the existence of the MoU, Tapiola said that forced labor abuses are still common.

The SPDC also continued to intimidate forced labor complainants. On 31 January, ILO Liaison Officer in Burma Steven Marshall went to Taungdwingyi, Magwe Division, to investigate a forced labor complaint filed by two local villagers. Before his arrival, local SPDC authorities threatened villagers not to report the truth about the forced labor complaint. In addition, USDA and Swan Arr Shin members surrounded the house where the ILO official met with the two villagers.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

Gambari’s latest gambit

In late January, UN Special Advisor on Burma Ibrahim Gambari returned to Asia to garner support for his mediation efforts between the SPDC and the NLD. Gambari’s itinerary included stops in India, China, Singapore, Indonesia, and Japan. Gambari’s mission also appeared to provide the needed leverage to allow him to return to Burma earlier than April, the month previously announced by the SPDC. On 21 February, Gambari announced that he will return to Burma in March and that he planned to discuss the country’s “roadmap to democracy”, including its plans to bar opposition leader Daw Aung San Suu Kyi from taking part in elections.

“Neighbor engagement” is Thailand’s new approach for Burma

On 25 February, newly appointed Thai FM Noppadon Pattama said that Thailand has no choice but to put national economic interests before human rights concerns in dealing with Burma. "In the past, we had constructive engagement and flexible engagement, but they never took us anywhere. Now, we will adopt another approach neighbor engagement," Noppadon said. The new Thai government is expected to restore business ties with the SPDC established by former PM, Thaksin Shinawatra.

New banking sanctions

On 5 February, the US Treasury Department tightened banking sanctions against junta crony Tay Za. The latest sanctions also target family members of regime leaders and key individuals and businesses that are part of Tay Za’s financial network. The department’s action froze any assets that they may have under US jurisdiction and barred Americans from conducting business with them.

On 25 February, the US Treasury Department added to its list Asia World Co Ltd, its managing director Steven Law, his wife Cecelia Ng, and his father, reputed drug lord Lo Hsing Han. This may be the

Rice to Bangladesh

On 12 February, the SPDC agreed to export 300,000 metric tons of rice to address shortages in Bangladesh. The SPDC Ministry of Commerce told Bangladesh authorities that payments for rice should be made by bank transfers via Singapore, in order to avoid US and EU banking sanctions. While the SPDC exports rice to Bangladesh, they are restricting the transport of rice across the country, leading to shortages and price increases for their own people. In the first two weeks of February, the price of rice increased over 10%.

Russian gold rush?

On 15 February, the SPDC’s Geological Survey and Mineral Exploration Department and the Russian-Singapore firm, Victorious Glory International Pte, signed a gold exploration agreement in Naypyidaw. The agreement covers gold and mineral surveys along the Uru River between Phakant, Kachin State and Homalin, Sagaing Division. The environmental organization Kachin Development Networking Group suspected that the “other mineral” mentioned in the agreement is uranium. There have been reports of Russian mineral inspectors in Phakant, Kachin State, since 2007.
